

Flynn's sNOw Hero

Cal Pye

Flynn Matthews, Hollywood heartthrob and renowned anti-drugs campaigner, was caught on film in the early hours of Saturday morning snorting cocaine in a seedy Soho club with a flock of foxy females draped decoratively around him.

Music pounding in the background, shirt unbuttoned to the waist and his hair in disarray Matthews is seen nose to nose with a glass table snorting line after line of white powder while scantily clad girls fawn over him in the private lounge area of the Partaay nightclub.

There seems little doubt that it is him. His presence at the club was confirmed by numerous late night revellers.

Loved by legions of besotted women across the globe for his clean cut ways this spectacular fall from grace is sure to send his popularity plummeting.

Last year it was reported that Matthews was, allegedly, heavily into illegal substances but his involvement in Celebs Against Drugs (CAD) squashed those, what was thought to be uncorroborated, rumours.

And the source of this video is said to be a close friend of Matthews' who is concerned about his addiction and wants him to seek help. It is reported that this close friend believed going public with the sordid video was the only way to get him to see sense.

Whatever the truth it certainly puts into question his involvement as poster boy for CAD. Flynn's certainly sNOw hero.
